Led by Mark Greene

Mark used to work in advertising and is prepared to admit it.

He is now Executive Director of the London Institute for Contemporary Christianity, and works as a speaker, writer and consultant specialising in work issues and contemporary culture. His books include "Thank God it's Monday," "The Best Idea in the World," "The Great Divide" and the groundbreaking essay "Imagine – How we can reach the UK."

Mark is married to Katriina and they have three exuberant teenagers - Matt, Tomas & Anna-Marie – and a dog called Spark.

How can we create a missional people?

Jesus called his disciples to be makers of disciples and yet, with all the pressures of local church, the core task of moving people beyond conversion to becoming confident fruitful followers of Jesus in all of life – work, home, leisure, church – can be a daunting one.

Mark Greene draws on LICC's eight years of reflection and on-the-ground work with local churches not only to identify the key theological and methodological barriers to disciple making but to offer a workable, sustainable framework for creating a disciple-making community.

The key to the approach is new eyes and so, as they have found, it can be begun without new programmes, new premises, new resources... Come and explore.
